FINANCIAL NEWS AND COMMENT

Slight Change Noted in Wall Street Market Conditions.

ACTIVITY IN FIRST HOUR

Confusing Movement Turns to General Low Level of Stocks.

Conditions were but little changed in the Wall street market yesterday, and after a highly confusing movement in the first hour prices generally sought lower levels. Although there were some movements in the market which were obviously not altogether professional, the chief business of the day resulted for the most part from operations by the trading element. The volume of business continued the process of contraction which has been in progress since the collapse of the big swing following the successful flotation of the third Liberty Loan, the dealings reaching a point where the daily average was considerably less than the most distinguishing feature of the day. Speculative impulse in the way of over-night news developments was lacking and the majority of standard issues lapsed into heaviness and later into pronounced weakness after a partial recovery of the ground lost in the dealings of the previous session. There were a few exceptions to the general rule, however, among shares of the specialty type which moved contrary to the general trend by reason of purely local developments.

There was no one factor to account for the bearish attitude taken toward the securities market by speculative buyers.

It was felt to be due to the fact that it is elastic and during one of the several very dull periods of the year it is not far from the mark to say that the market is in a state of peculiar indecision.
